Boycott Putin Now! Extended Twitter Storm

The World Cup ends on Sunday July 13, which means the media will turn to discussing the next World Cup...in Russia. Let's give them something to talk about.

The media hangs out on Twitter; that's why Twitter storms are so important. If you couldn't make today's storm at noon ET educating World Cup sponsors like VISA (in which our tweets reached approximately half a million people!), please post our list of pre-made messages sometime this week. It will only take 10 minutes.

Not on Twitter? It's easy to open an account.

Don't want to use your "work" account? Open an anonymous one which is something a lot of our organizers do. The more voices we have on there the louder we become.

Through Sunday, our messages will be posted on #DigitalMaidan's Facebook page: DMaidan.com/FB so you can post them anytime until the World Cup ends.

Our storm will also feature urgent fundraising messages from the Re:Ukraine initiative of the Ukrainian Canadian Congress, which just raised $20,000 to send shipments of blood-clotting agent Celox to the frontlines.

Thank you to United with Ukraine, the Ukrainian Canadian Students' Union \(SUSK\), and other #DigitalMaidan organizers for putting this important storm together.

The World Cup stands for peace and will be a $20 BILLION gift to Putin and his cronies. We can't let him have it.
